ABSTRACT

Introduction. The changes in the Polish legislation regulating the performance of the professions of a nurse and a midwife which have taken place since January 2012 generate a necessity to analyse the level of knowledge of the legal conditions of practising the profession in these professional groups.

Aim. The aim of the study is the attempt to assess the knowledge of the principles of professional liability as dependent on education held among midwives.

Material and methods. The study included 100 midwives from Warsaw hospitals as well as primary health care units. Respondents were divided into two groups. Group I covered 50 midwives with a completed medical vocational school/secondary school, Group II – 50 midwives with completed midwifery studies. The mean age in Group I – 55 years, in Group II – 29 years. The study was conducted between 22 October 2012 and 17 January 2013 using a questionnaire of the authors' own design. The participation in the study was voluntary and anonymous. Midwives received the survey questionnaire. The questionnaire – 34 questions, 30 single or multiple choice closed questions, 2 semi-open questions and 2 open questions (age, length of work).

Results. No significant influence of the level of education on the state of knowledge of legal regulations concerning the performance of the nursing profession was disclosed in the study group. Nevertheless, statistical significance showing differences between the study groups was found, among others, in questions concerning the date of being awarded the right to practise the profession (p<0.014), the source document regulating professional liability (p<0.034) as well as the body keeping the register of nurses and midwives penalised (p<0.052).

Conclusions. 1. In the study group the knowledge of professional liability regulated by legal acts currently in force was insufficient and requires to be complemented.

2. In the study group of midwives the level of education affected the level of knowledge of the professional liability of nurses and midwives – midwives with higher education showed a higher level knowledge of professional liability than the study group of midwives with medium-level education.

KEYWORDS: midwives, professional liability, knowledge.

STRESZCZENIE

Wstęp. Zmiany, które nastąpiły od 1 stycznia 2012 roku w ustawodawstwie polskim regulującym wykonywanie zawodów: pielęgniarki i położnej powodują konieczność analizy poziomu wiedzy tych grup zawodowych na temat aktualnych uwarunkowań prawnych dotyczących wykonywania zawodu.

Cel. Celem pracy jest próba oceny wiedzy położnych na temat zasad odpowiedzialności zawodowej w zależności od posiadanego wykształcenia.

Materiał i metody. W badaniach udział wzieło 100 położnych z warszawskich placówek szpitalnych oraz POZ. Podział badanych na dwie grupy. Grupa I obejmowała 50 położnych, które skończyły studium/liceum medyczne, Grupa II - 50 położnych, które ukończyły studia wyższe na kierunku położnictwo. Średnia wieku Grupy I - 55 lat, a Grupy II - 29 lat. Badanie przeprowadzono od 22 października 2012 roku do 17 stycznia 2013 roku za pomocą kwestionariusza własnego autorstwa. Udział w badaniu był dobrowolny i anonimowy. Położne otrzymały kwestionariusz ankiet z rak osoby przeprowadzającej badanie. Ankieta - 34 pytania, 30 pytań zamkniętych jednokrotnego lub wielokrotnego wyboru, 2 pytania półotwarte i 2 pytania otwarte (wiek, staż pracy). Wyniki. Wiekszość respondentek (85%) nie wiedziała jaki zakres obejmuje postępowanie w przedmiocie odpowiedzialności zawodowej. 45% położnych oceniła stan swojej wiedzy na temat zasad ponoszenia odpowiedzialności zawodowej jako dostateczny, zaś 33% twierdziło, że jest on na poziomie niedostatecznym. W badanej grupie położnych wykształcenie miało wpływ na poziom wiedzy na temat aktualnych przepisów prawnych: osoby z wykształceniem wyższym posiadały wyższy poziom wiedzy dotyczący odpowiedzialności zawodowej.

Wnioski. 1. W badanej grupie wiedza na temat zakresu odpowiedzialności zawodowej regulowanej aktualnymi aktami prawnymi była niewystarczająca i wymaga pilnego uzupełnienia.

2. W badanej grupie położnych poziom wykształcenia miał wpływ na poziom wiedzy na temat zakresu odpowiedzialności zawodowej pielęgniarek i położnych – położne z wykształceniem wyższym posiadały wyższy poziom wiedzy dotyczącej odpowiedzialności zawodowej, niż badana grupa położnych z wykształceniem średnim.

SŁOWA KLUCZOWE: położne, odpowiedzialność zawodowa, wiedza.

386 POLISH NURSING NR 4 (58) 2015 ORIGINAL PAPER

Introduction

Professional liability is a legal and moral obligation to bear the consequences of professional activities performed personally or ordered to be performed by another person or of the negligence or failure to perform them [1, 2]. It is linked to belonging to a specific professional group and the interpretation of standards adopted by this group [3]. The main legal act regulating guestions related to the professional liability of midwives is the law of 1 July 2011 on the self-government of nurses and midwives. The professional liability of midwives is the subject of Chapter 6 of the said law (Articles 36-88). The provisions of these articles specify the proceedings to be followed with respect to professional liability, the aims of the proceedings and organs taking place in them [4]. Failure of the midwife to perform her professional duties can result in her being held professionally liable. What is usually involved is incorrect performance of doctors' orders or failure to perform them, failure to provide medical assistance in case of need, failure to respect patient's rights or incorrectly kept medical documentation [5].

Aim

The aim of the study was the attempt to assess the level of knowledge of the principles of professional liability among midwives in relation to education held.

Material

The study was carried out on a group of 100 midwives undertaking work in selected Warsaw hospitals and primary health care units. The respondents were divided into two groups according to education held (Groups 1 and 2).

Group 1 included 50 midwives with a completed vocational medical school or medical secondary school (mean age: 55 years) while Group 2 – 50 midwives with completed higher education (bachelor's degree or master's degree studies) in the field of midwifery (mean age: 29 years).

Methods

The study was carried out between 22 October 2012 and 17 January 2013 using a questionnaire designed by the authors themselves. The participation in the study was voluntary and the questionnaire anonymous. The midwives received the questionnaire from a researcher. The questionnaire contained 34 questions, including 30 single and multiple choice closed questions, 2 semi-open questions and 2 open questions (age, length of work). The questions posed in the questionnaire concerned the knowledge of professional liability in the study group.

Statistical analysis of the obtained results

The collected data were subjected to statistical analysis carried out in the Division of Teaching and Outcomes of Education of the Faculty of Health Science, Medical University of Warsaw, with the use of the STATISTICA 10.0 programme (MUV license). As the comparison involved two independent groups of midwives - a group of midwives with medium-level education (Group 1) and a group of midwives with higher education (Group II) as well as due to the character of the analysed data (qualitative, nonparametric data) which did not have a normal distribution (p>0.05) – analysed with the Shapiro-Wilk Test, the non-parametric statistical Mann-Whitney U Test was used to statistically analyse the obtained results. The level of statistical significance of p<0.05 was adopted as statistically significant.

Results

The majority of the midwives studied knew that civil and professional liability of midwives did not constitute the same type of professional liability. In addition, midwives with completed higher education gave the correct answer to the question about the entity in charge of examining issues related to the professional liability of midwives more frequently. Detailed results are given in Table 1.

A considerable part of the midwives participating in the study knew that it was not a breach of professional secrecy to testify on the subject of professional liability in the course of proceedings. Moreover, the majority of midwives knew that the organ conducting proceedings in matters of professional liability could seek an expert's or a specialist's opinion. The education level of the respondents affected the answers given by the them. Detailed results are presented in Table 2.

In addition, a prevailing majority of the respondents were aware of the fact that the court of nurses and midwives could impose a penalty of not only withdrawing or suspending the right to practice the profession but also a warning, a reprimand, a financial penalty, a prohibition to perform executive functions in health care units for a period of 1 to 5 years as well as a limitation of the scope of activities in practising the profession for a period from 6 months to 2 years.

Discussion

The approach to the subject of the professional liability of people performing medical professions in both Polish and foreign literature is multidimensional.

E. Rozwadowska et al. analysed the knowledge of the law of 15 July 1996 on the professions of a nurse and a midwife among students of nursing and midwifery [6]. A study covering 273 students of nursing, midwifery and professionally active nurses and midwives analysed answers given in reply to questions concerning the knowledge of the law referred to. The results obtained led to a conclusion that the majority of respondents was right to find the statements that 'a nurse/midwife being a citizen of the EU member state cannot be awarded the right to practice the profession in the territory of Poland' as well as 'the obligation to maintain professional secrecy of a nurse/midwife ceases with a patient's death' false. As many as 85% of the respondents wrongly found correct the answer that 'it is possible to begin practising the profession of a nurse/midwife after a lapse of 5 years from completing the post-diploma internship'. The respondents revealed good knowledge as regards the obligation to extend assistance to patients in case of a threat to their life. Another important aspect to be emphasized was the fact that 100% of the midwives gave a correct reply when asked about a refusal to perform a doctor's order indicating the need to immediately give the cause of the refusal in writing. Conversely, 33% of the midwives gave a correct answer to the question about the time of lodging an appeal against a decision suspending the right to practice the profession during the period of incapacity for work or limiting the performance of specific professional actions during the period in question. The obtained results allowed to say that a prevailing majority of the respondents showed considerable knowledge of the provisions of the law. A study by Kostrzewska and Małek on a group of nurses from the Independent Public Health Care Unit in Łuków revealed that 42% of respondents were familiar with ethical principles [7].

The publication of G. Gaweł, et al. [8] was aimed at assessing the awareness of professional liability in a group of nurses. It revealed knowledge of the legal acts in force as well as application of the procedures in force which would give a guarantee of security to both the patients and the medical professionals. According to the respondents, it is respect for another human being and responsibility that constitute the most essential moral values. Over 2/3 of the respondents possess knowledge in the area of bearing professional liability. In addition, it was indicated that the knowledge of the legal regulations was insufficient and required to be complemented [9]. The study by Zaniewicz and Marczewski [10] is another example of a commonly witnessed gap between the procedures in force and the actually performed services. It was found out that a prevailing majority of the respondents indicated people from their immediate surroundings as a basic source of information about their duties in the work post, with 54% of the respondents pointing to the ward nurse, 91% of the respondents were in agreement about the right to inform patients and their family about the patient's health status and prognosis. The research findings show that it is often against the law to delegate such duties to nurses. The respondents revealed numerous gaps in the knowledge of legal regulations as well as lack of knowledge of their own scope of duties which make them subject to the principles and rules effective in their place of work. Our own research findings show that 45% of the respondents assess their knowledge of the principles of professional liability as satisfactory. Only 34% indicated correctly which legal act regulated professional liability and as few as half of them gave a correct reply to the question: 'In what year were the currently affective Law on the Self-government of Nurses and Midwives and Law on the Professions of a Nurse and a Midwife adopted?' In addition, more than half of the respondents distinguishes between professional and civil liability pointing out that it is the same type of liability. This shows that midwives do not have sufficient knowledge of legal regulations. The analysis of our own findings as well as the available literature allows to say that the knowledge of legal acts regulating professional liability among nurses and midwives is insufficient. Depending on the question answered, the respondents may show satisfactory knowledge. Consequently, a larger number of trainings and courses in pertinent legal regulations presenting and discussing the scope of the rights and duties of nurses and midwives seems to be highly recommended.

Conclusions

- The knowledge on the subject of professional liability regulated by the legal acts currently in force in the study group was insufficient and requires to be complemented urgently.
- The level of education affected the level of knowledge on the subject of professional liability of nurses and midwives in the study group, with midwives with higher education having a higher level of knowledge as regards professional liability than the study group of midwives with medium-level education.
